LETTER FROM CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER AND BOARD CHAIR

A highlight for CMHA Thunder Bay this past year was the signing of its "Declaration of Recovery." This declaration, supported by a resolution from the Board, demonstrates our commitment to continue to learn, grow and change; to expand and sometimes challenge our previous understanding, skills and expertise of what it means to be a recovery focused organization; and to be open to building new knowledge, skills and practices that support an authentic recovery focused provision of care for the people we serve.

Our mission states that "we are committed to supporting individual recovery and promoting mental wellness within families and communities." Regardless of an individual’s past history, personal story, or current circumstances, our primary focus is to work with our clients to explore creative and innovative strategies that will help them succeed in their journey of recovery. In the year ahead, we will continue to ensure evidence based recovery care and support is provided across all areas of the organization.

Thank you to our Board, volunteers, staff, management, and the people we serve, for your contributions to this journey! It is through our shared efforts that we will make our commitment to recovery a reality and support Mental Health for All in the year ahead!

The Society of Excellent Men is about more than looking good in a suit; the Society’s goal is to raise funds for and awareness of mental health in our community. When asked to join the Society of Excellent Men, the word “excellent” makes most men nervous. Hugh Briggs, who joined the Society in 2011, had this to say on the subject:

“At first I thought it would be difficult asking for donations for what sounded like an elitist group. I took a bit of ribbing from a couple of close friends but in all honesty, everyone really got behind the cause and the name of the group wasn’t an issue.

Now, I don’t even think about it. The opportunity to raise awareness about mental health issues and to help break down the barriers created by stigma is what matters.

It’s been a good experience and I’ve had some fun. I’ve acquired my SmartServe training and I learned how to walk the runway in a fashion show. Neither will help if I’m ever stranded on a deserted island, but they’re not bad skills to have. In the end, the fundraising that the Society does is important because those dollars support programs at CMHA and the Children’s Centre. What may be more important is the frank and open discussion we are encouraging everyone to finally have about mental health—their own and those around them, at home, at work and in their community. When you look at it that way, I guess we are a Society of Excellent Men!”
PARTNERS IN EXCELLENCE:
7 YEARS OF STYLES & SMILES

Seven years ago, the Canadian Mental Health Association formed a partnership with the Children’s Centre Foundation to organize a unique event that would provide an opportunity to share mental health issues with the community, focus on breaking down barriers and reducing the stigma around mental illness, and raise funds for both organizations at the same time. This event is Styles & Smiles: A Tribute to the Society of Excellent Men.

The partnership with the Children’s Centre Foundation, was formulated mainly through two men; Tom Walters, former Executive Director of the Children’s Centre, and John Ramage, former CMHA Board member. The inspiration for the Society of Excellent Men came from CMHA lifetime member Shirley King’s late husband, Howard, who always set an example of kindness and caring for others.

The ongoing partnership with the Children’s Centre Foundation has proven to be a good fit as the two organizations provide similar services, although to different populations. By combining our efforts we have been able to reach a broader audience and open up the conversation about men’s mental health issues.

We are all looking forward to partnering again for Styles & Smiles 2016!

OFF THE BEATEN PATH

Mark Myers & Joan Robinson

Case Manager Joan Robinson has been taking her clients out to the forest. Based on the Japanese concept of “Shinrin-Yoku”—literally, forest bathing—Forest Therapy is much more than a walk in the park. It is about taking the time to connect, reflect, and truly immerse oneself in nature.

Studies have shown that a disconnect from nature can negatively impact mental and physical health. By taking clients for forest walks, Joan has been able to reconnect them with nature while simultaneously introducing them to mindfulness and the use of all five senses. Joan’s clients have reported significant mood improvements, feeling invigorated, and feeling a sense of connection and hope. Having gone for many forest walks with Joan, Mark Myers has found his reconnection with nature to be very useful in his recovery journey.

“Forest Therapy has helped me establish a relationship with myself as well as let me think in a more positive way. My worker, Joan, has helped me get out into the community, by showing up to take me out when I was at my lowest state of mind. When I started with one positive thing like forest therapy, it was a chain reaction of other avenues.”

MAKING CONNECTIONS

Carol Maxwell

As a crisis worker, I have been privileged to support individuals in their time of need, whether they are in the community or in our crisis residence—a place that offers nurturance and wellness planning during one’s stay. Crisis support may entail a comforting voice at the other end of the phone, reflecting hope for someone whose darkness has blinded them in the moment, or reassuring someone that a trained professional is there to assist with their crisis.

We value everyone in our community. All calls are assessed according to the principle that a person’s crisis is individual with individual experiences, circumstances and needs. The caller can be anyone—a child, an adult, a family member, or a friend. This has been a guide for me in making a connection; treating all individuals with the respect and dignity as I would a family member or friend, not unlike the golden rule: “do unto others as you would have them do unto you.”

The mission and values of CMHA have provided an environment that has fostered this service and support for all persons in our community by committing to the principles of recovery and client centered approach respecting the diversity and strengths of those we serve.
I participated in Pathways To Resilience: Restoring the Elements of a Joyful Life offered by the Education and Training Program. This is a ten-week program based on The Chemistry of Joy Workbook by Dr. Henry Emmons.

Pathways to Resilience provided me with insight to help me restore my body, mind and spirit. It provided a safe, supportive environment where I learned how to use action based tools that helped restore my resilience. These are tools that anyone can use to empower their own sense of wellness. The knowledge and skills learned compliment the natural therapies I have incorporated into my life.

This course is really about healthy living and taking care of yourself first! For me that includes surrounding myself with people who are supportive and non-judgemental. Pathways gave me a rope to grab on to. I have to do it myself by tapping into my own inner wisdom and the wisdom learned in the course. I know that I can do this instead of depending on others to do it for me. I now have the skills to steer my own bus!

FINDING YOUR OWN WAY

Elizabeth Buset

Local artist and educator Elizabeth Buset began working with First Place Clinic in 2014, providing a four part series investigating alternative art practices for young clients. The youth were introduced to the art of Japanese Bookbinding, stencil making, and drawing. Building on the success of the workshop, Elizabeth and clinic staff developed an 8 week stencil workshop at the Thunder Bay Art Gallery. Participants created self portraits using stencils and spray paint. Elizabeth began each class with a presentation on the history of Street Art. The group, called 10 Cell (a play on stencil and the 10 participants) also created a collaborative artwork called “Finding Your Own Way”. An eclectic combination of patterns, the painting shows a school of stenciled fish swimming, with a single, brightly coloured fish swimming in the opposite direction. The work celebrates the unique artistic spirit fostered during the workshop. Using the same stencils the youth regrouped in March 2015 to create a fish painting for the Gallery’s Art Auction fundraiser, and a rain barrel to support Eco Superior’s rain barrel auction.

Youth commented that the project “was a good learning experience” and that “stencil cutting was hard work.” Others stated that they “liked the art history lessons about graffiti artist.” They were all pleased with their finished pieces of art, which were on display at the gallery for one month.

Robert’s formula for success in his path to recovery.

Robert’s leadership and dedication is demonstrated by the fact that he has virtually not missed a day throughout his tenure at New Foundations. He has become such a mainstay that he is commonly referred to as our executive chef. He has taken countless cooking classes, is always willing to try a new innovative recipe and has been part of a team that has served well in excess of 100,000 meals in the program.

Robert has many passions and is a great role model. Cooking, and spending time with family and friends is important to him and his well being. Robert has been a loyal and committed volunteer and fundraiser for the Schizophrenia Society of Northern Ontario.

CMHA has provided opportunities for Robert, such as volunteering with the local humane society, and as one of Thunder Bay’s Excellent Men. Robert had the distinction of being one of the top fundraisers for Styles & Smiles. Participation in CMHA programs and events has provided a strong base for Robert to prosper, grow and feel like a valued member of our community. If one has a sense of purpose and meaning in their day, their road to recovery can be paved in gold—or, in Robert’s case, chocolate chip cookies.
The Canadian Mental Health Association, Thunder Bay Branch, is part of a national non-profit organization that is dedicated to enhancing and promoting the mental health of individuals, families and community through advocacy, education and mental health services.
